- Search for colleges and build your college list
- Keep track of your college application decisions

See how you stack up.

- Complete your profile and add colleges to your list to get your data-driven Parchment predictions.
- How are these predictions created?
Parchment builds statistical models from the results of students who have voluntarily added their admissions data in the past.
- On each college's page, click the "Scatterplots & Analytics" link to see a how you stack up against admitted and denied students at that college. Tip: Mouse over the dots to see actual student profiles.
- See each school's prediction accuracy by visiting the Chance Details page. In general, colleges with more data have better models.
- Predictions are probabilities. If you are given a 10% chance and you applied to a college 100 times, you should be accepted 10 of those times, if the college's model were accurate.

If you want to attend a college, you should ALWAYS apply. Students get in to colleges despite 0% chances. The predictions are only meant to be a guide to help you build your list.

The only way to guarantee you will not get into a college is to not apply.
